SCOUT EXECUTIVE LUNCHEON GUEST OF LOCAL LIONS

Raymond Hanson, director of San Francisco Council, Boy Scouts of America, was the speaker guest of the Daly City Lions at Monday's luncheon meeting. A gifted speaker, and master of his subject, Mr. Hanson proved a most interesting guest in giving club members some little insight into the origin, ideals and accomplishments of the Boy Scout movement. The bigness of the organization generally and its direct bearing for good in the local communities were stressed.

Details of an outing planned for next Sunday, April 10, were perfected. The scene of the outing will be the country place of Claude B. Rich, vice-president of the local club, and a most enjoyable time is promised the members and their families.

Among the surprise features of the meeting was the music furnished by two talented young men, Leo Guisti and Virgil Casanova, who are accomplished performers on the accordion, several numbers being played by the young men. Lions Jeff Beeson and Bill Lantheaume put over a funny one relative to the real jungle beasts.

SPECIAL SERVICES AT GRACE PRESBYTERIAN

The services at Grace Presbyterian church next Sunday evening, commemorating Palm Sunday, will be from the theme, "Christ's Triumphal Entry." Special music is promised for this service.

Last Sunday's services were well attended and a splendid spirit of cooperation was manifest.

The luncheon on Wednesday noon by Ladies of the Aid was surpassed by none held as yet, crowd bigger, the meal abundant and everybody happy. Mrs. Stockton was in charge, with Mrs. Tompsett, Mrs. Joe Swan and Mrs. Miller on the committee.

There will be a special service on Easter morning in the reception of members and the baptism of those who wish this ordinance. Dr. Willis, of the Ocean Avenue Presbyterian church will be with us.

Let's get closer fellowship in our community. Take your home paper, write some news for your editor, help your home school, brag on your child's teacher a little, be a neighbor to those who live near you, build up your own church in the community, stop finding fault, be a booster, make the world happy and live long.

We are having special nights for everything these days. Why not have a special night when all members of the family are to stay at home and get acquainted with each other. For after all it is the memory of home that will stay with you through life.

TWO POPULAR GIRLS TENDERED SHOWER

Last Thursday evening the Misses Thelma Selmi and Julia Sampson, who are to become brides very soon, were tendered a miscellaneous shower at the home of Mrs. Lorraine Wall, on Bellevue avenue, by a group of their young friends.

The table was beautifully decorated with red tulips, and besides the many good things the girls had furnished for the supper, there was a large cake, with the best wishes of the girls to the two young ladies.

Games and dancing were enjoyed during the evening, after which the supper was served. Both young ladies received many beautiful gifts, and were both delighted, as the shower was a complete surprise to both.

Those who participated in the affair were: The Misses Thelma Selmi, Julia Sampson, Louise Segale, Sarah Battini, Ruby O'Connor, Marge O'Connor, Dolores Barron, Marge Varni, Annette Lucey, Frieda Christen, Elsie Fahey, Louise Gregoire, Colista Dalton, Tessie O'Connor, Caroline Spani, Flossie McKendrick, Laura Fogoni, Mrs. Sylvia Fischer, Mrs. Etta Stewart, Mrs. Christine Hume, and the hostess, Mrs. Lorraine Wall. Everyone had a most enjoyable time.

SUNDAY LAW WILL BE TESTED AT LAWNDALE

Steps to test to validity of Lawndale's "Sunday closing" law were taken Tuesday when a writ of habeas corpus was procured for Nello Bocci, member of the firm of Gaetano Bocci & Co., tombstone manufacturers.

Bocci was arrested on March 23 on charges of violating the ordinance of Lawndale which prohibits manufacture or sale of monuments on Sunday. Bocci's attorneys, Wm. Grant and J. V. Zimdaro, in petitioning for the writ, contended that Sunday is the only day in which the monument business can be conducted successfully.

SCHOOL'S CIRCUS PROVES SUCCESS

Jefferson Union high school's second annual circus, held last Friday night, was a great success. Unfortunately the parade, in spite of its elaborate preparation, had to be called off on account of an unusual burst of rain.

The main show consisted of ten acts, as follows: March, clown band; jousts; shadow show; "Oscar," the educated ostrich; the littlest strong man in the world; "Fleurette," the dainty diminutive tight-rope artist; accordion duet, by Virgil Casanova and Leo Guisti; Miss Stella Hewitt, contortonist and dancer; cock fight; Horace Mann tumbling team.

Side shows were opened at the conclusion of the big show. The fifteen side shows were as follows: Trip to Hades, Rooms 1 and 2; Animated Funny Paper, Room 3; Zulu Zeleke, the snake charmer, Room 4; Bowling, Golf, Archery, Room 5; Large Collection of Freaks, Room 6; Fish Pond, North entrance; Baby Show, Room 7; Candy Booth, North alcove; Nickel Dance, Auditorium, 10:30 to 12; Fortune Teller, South alcove; Hawaiian Village, Room 8; Movie Show, "Nobody's Business," Room 10; Prince of Wales Horse, Room 12; Midget Vaudeville, Room 14; A View Into the Future, south entrance. Refreshments were served at the school store. Dancing occupied the rest of the evening.

The circus was a financial as well as a social success, and the receipts will give a big boost to the school annual, "Jefferson Spirit."

POOLE IS CHAIRMAN OF COUNTY BOARD

John W. Poole, Redwood City drayman, appointed by Governor C. C. Young last week to succeed the late Supervisor John MacBain, was named chairman of the San Mateo county board of supervisors at the meeting at Redwood City last Monday. The vote on the nomination of Poole was unanimous, following a motion offered by Supervisor Thomas L. Hickey and seconded by Supervisor Rosalie M. Brown.

Dr. C. V. Thompson, who had served as chairman pro tem during the last illness of the late chairman, presided at the opening of the meeting, the first order of which was the elevation of the newly appointed supervisor to the post left vacant by the death of Chairman MacBain.

PASSING OF ROBERT NELSON

On March 30, was celebrated at the McLaughlin Daniels' undertaking parlors, the funeral of Robert Nelson, beloved husband of Margaret Nelson, loving father of William Nelson and Robert Nelson, Mrs. James H. Hawthorne and Mrs. Homer Petty, brother of William Nelson of Oakland, and James Nelson of Ireland, grandfather of Jimmy and Margaret Roberta Hawthorne, Maizie Roberta Nelson and the late Aileen Petty. Mr. Nelson was a member of Carpenters' Union, Local No. 22, and Past Master of F. & A. M. of Belfast, Ireland. He was a native of Belfast, aged 61 years. The service held was the essence of simplicity, in perfect harmony with the strict integrity and plain honesty which marked the character of Mr. Nelson. In this respect his wishes were loyally carried out by his devoted wife. The glory of God in nature, in the vast and infinitesimal, and the greater glories of God in the spiritual realm, were the subject of a sympathetic address by the Rev. O. Congdon. An abundance of floral tributes of exceptional beauty was especially remarkable. Interment took place at Cypress Lawn cemetery.

MOTORIST INJURED WHEN STREET CAR HITS AUTO

When a northbound street car crashed into his machine in the "bottleneck" near Colma Sunday, Manuel Phillips, San Francisco grain broker, was hurled from his car to the pavement, incuring painful injuries. Two passengers in Phillips' car escaped without injury. Passing motorists rushed the injured man to the South San Francisco hospital, where he was given first aid treatment for cuts and bruises about his face and body. His car was completely demolished.

SHOPLIFTERS GIVEN 30-DAY TERM IN THE COUNTY JAIL

Paul Evich, of Redwood City, arrested last week in Palo Alto on a shoplifting charge, was sentenced to thirty days in the county jail, while his wife, Eva, and Mrs. Stella Evich, who were arrested at the same time, were each given six months' suspended jail sentences. They all had entered pleas of guilty to charges of petty larceny. The trio victimized a number of stores in Palo Alto, Redwood City and San Mateo.

CITY MAP ISSUED BY LOCAL FIRM MAKES A BIG HIT

Recently the Community Realty Company of Daly City, realizing the great need of a map of this community showing the exact location of all the new streets, had 10,000 maps printed and distributed, not only in Daly City, but all over the state of California, as well as to the majority of the large business houses in San Francisco.

This map has proved to be a great advertising medium for this community, for since the distribution of these maps the Community Realty Company has received many letters from outside points, asking for further information regarding this district. Not only have letters been received from these distant points, but some of the large business houses in San Francisco, having an eye on the rapid development of Daly City, have requested the Community Realty Company to kindly supply them with a number of maps. One of the taxicab companies of San Francisco is anxious to have a supply of these maps in order that the drivers of the taxicabs, answering a call from this district, will lose no time or be put to any unnecessary inconvenience in finding the location.

The map is folded in three folds and can be carried in the pocket or handbag, and it has proved to be one of the best methods of boosting Daly City, both far and near.

If any of your friends are desirous of obtaining one of these maps, they may be obtained by calling at the office of the Community Realty Company, at 6398 Mission street.

STREET WORK PLANS BEFORE THE BOARD

The assessment plan as proposed for the Knowles avenue and cross streets street work is of interest to all the people of Daly City, and it is the hope of the Board of Trustees that all parties interested in this matter will be present at the board meeting next Monday evening at the City Hall, when the plan will be discussed and explained.

EAMON DE VALERA TO VISIT SAN FRANCISCO

When Eamon de Valera, indomitable Republican leader of Ireland, arrives in San Francisco from New York tomorrow (April 9), he will be accorded perhaps the greatest public welcome staged for some time in San Francisco to honor a distinguished visitor from another country, according to official reception plans announced by Mayor James Rolph.

The militant Irishman, universally renowned as a university professor of mathematics, was the "First President of the Irish Republic." He is now leading the Republican forces of Ireland in the coming election contest against the so-called Free State government there.

The board of supervisors of San Francisco, as a result of a resolution unanimously adopted, will officially welcome de Valera to the city upon his arrival at the Ferry early Saturday afternoon, April 9. Headed by Mayor Rolph, all the board members will be on hand to greet de Valera and present him with a huge key to San Francisco.

Scores of American and Irish societies are to march in a mammoth parade that will escort de Valera to the City Hall and thence to the Whitcomb Hotel, where he will remain during his stay in San Francisco.

On Sunday afternoon, de Valera is to address a public mass meeting in the Civic Auditorium. Several functions have been arranged in his honor. He leaves the evening of April 11 for Los Angeles.

BUILDING PERMITS FOR PAST WEEK

City Clerk B. C. Ross reports the following building permits for the week:

J. Bjorkman, 8 Templeton avenue, five rooms and garage.

J. Fahey, 61 Hillcrest Drive, five rooms and garage; 67 Hillcrest Drive, five rooms and garage.

Mrs. G. Peterson, 185 Santa Barbara avenue, garage.

THIS WOULD INDICATE A STEADY GROWTH

Mrs. L. T. Cook, of the city water offce, reports the following newcomers for the first week in April:

P. Cain, 399 Vista Grande avenue.
J. J. Carboni, 184 Irvington street.
R. Stall, 418 Frankfort street.
H. Sandvik, 134 Santa Barbara ave.
H. R. Hardy, 1216 Brunswick street.

CHILDREN SHOULD KEEP OFF STREET WHILE AT PLAY

"Safety First" posters are being placed in all the schools of San Francisco and San Mateo county by the California State Automobile Association.

In 1926, twenty-seven children children under the age of 16 were killed by automobiles, trucks and taxi-cabs in San Francisco. Of this number nineteen were boys and eight were girls. This difference no doubt arises from the fact that boys are more likely to play in the streets than girls. Children should be urged to use the playgrounds, the school yards, their own back yards if they have them, vacant lots and the city parks. Playing on city streets is on a par with playing on railroad tracks.

Nineteen of the children who lost their lives in traffic accidents were under the age of 10, and eight were from 10 to 15 years of age. In eleven of the cases the children involved in fatal accidents were entirely responsible because of carelessness in their use of the city streets. In these cases the drivers of the motor vehicles were exonerated by coroner's juries. In five cases the drivers were entirely to blame and in one case partially to blame. In six cases the accident was wholly accidental or both driver and child was mutually responsible. In three cases the jury was unable to fix responsibility and one case involved a "hit-and-run" driver whose identy could not be established.

The causes of these accidents varied. Several children were killed as the result of crossing in the middle of the block instead of at crossings. In one case the child collided with an automobile while stealing a ride; several lost their lives as a result of running from between parked cars, and others from running into the side of moving automobiles while playing ball in the street. Two were killed while playing between parked cars.

Statistics indicate that the child begins to play an important role in the accident situation after the third year. As he grows older his part becomes bigger and less limited in scope. Accidental fatalities in the third year are twice those in the second year. The tragic increase continues and in the age group, 5 to 9, a peak is reached, not again attained until we reach the age group, 60 to 64 years.

The most dangerous months for children are April, June, August and October. In 1926 between 630 and 650 children in this country under 15 years of age lost their lives during each of these months. The lowest month in 1926 was February, also the lowest in total number of automobile deaths, when only 130 children were killed.

Surveys and studies of the locations of child accidents show that the dangers lie just beyond the concongested residental sections where yards are the exception.

RANKS SECOND IN AUTO REGISTRATION

Complete final figures on motor vehicle registration throughout the country for 1926, compiled by the California State Automobile Association, shows that California increased its lead for second place with a total of 1,611,780, while New York holds first place with 1,833,750. California widened the gap that separates it from Pennsylvania, with a 1926 registration of 1,505,480 in third place. California gained 160,237 over 1926, Pennsylvania 126,606, and New York 208,167. Ohio is in fourth place with a final 1926 registration of 1,488,210, and Illinois is fifth with 1,375,260, Michigan sixth with 1,122,223, and Texas seventh, with 1,051,192, crashed the million mark for the first time.

ARCHBISHOP CONFIRMS CLASS

Archbishop Edward J. Hanna, of San Francisco, officiated at an elaborate confirmation ceremony held on Tuesday night at St. Matthew's Catholic church, San Mato, when a class of 150 was confirmed. This class was the largest ever to be confirmed in San Mateo and elaborate preparations had been made for the ceremony.

STANFORD STUDENT FACES CHARGE OF HIT-AND-RUN

Norman Ambrose, 24-year-old Stanford student was arrested in Burlingame Monday night on a hit-and-run charge, it being alleged that he had figured in a crash at Eighteenth and Geary streets, San Francisco, and fled without stopping to render assistance. The front end of Ambrose's car was badly damaged as a result of the collision.

WOULD SPEND TEN MILLION ON ROADS

To facilitate the movement of traffic that floods the highways of the peninsula as it flows to and from San Francisco, Supervisor Andrew J. Gallagher last Monday proposed to the San Francisco supervisors that a special commission of engineers be appointed to regulate the matter.

This committee would make a comprehensive plan of rapid transit highways from San Francisco down the peninsula. Supervisor Gallagher estimated that added means of ingress and egress to handle the mounting flow of traffic would probably cost from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000, vehicle tunnels being included in the program.

The plan, as Gallagher presented it, would call for the appointement of one engineer by Mayor Rolph, one by the combined peninsula cities, and the appointment of the third engineer by the first two.

The plan of the San Francisco official would be a big boon to the peninsula district, it was stated. It was declared that property values would increase, and the population of the peninsula would grow, due to the solution to the only drag on progress in this section, transportation problems.

SAN JOSE WILL HOLD FIESTA OF THE ROSES

The second annual Fiesta of the Roses, commemorating the 150th anniversary of the founding of San Jose, will be held the week of April 30.

Buildings of old-time San Jose will be reproduced, and roses, marigolds, lillies and other blooms will decorate the floats for the annual parade. Spanish costumes will be seen on the streets of the city, and whiskers will be popular. The exposition grounds will be located in the heart of the business district, and articles of various kinds will be on exhibit.

Founded November 29, 1777, by Lieutenant Don Jose de Moraga, commandante of the San Francisco Presidio, San Jose was the first town of Alto California, or the upper state of California under Spanish regime.

The first legislature of California met at San Jose on December 15, 1849, in a two-story adobe structure known as the State House. In this crude structure California's first legislature began shaping the destiny of a state second to none in prosperity and advancement.

In commemorating the honor of being California's first pueblo and first capital, San Jose extends a special invitation to everyone, far and near, to join with her in her historical celebration and Spanish gaiety during the week of April 30 to May 7.

COUNTY CHAMBER IS REORGANIZED

The reorganization of the San Mateo County Chamber of Commerce under a resolution prepared by District Attorney Franklin Swart was voted by the board of supervisors, in session at Redwood City last Monday, and Roscoe D. Wyatt named as manager of the county booster body. The new procedure corrects a former proceeding in the organization of the chamber, under which it was found impossible to meet the salary of the manager by the county warrant system. The action taken Monday records the employment of Wyatt by the county, so the salary and other claims of the organization may be in legal form. Wyatt's salary was set at $3,000 per year.

The orginal board of directors, with the exception of John D. Bromfield, of Burlingame, who recently resigned, was named, with Walter Kellogg, of Redwood City, as the representative of the Third township. The executive board, headed by Fred H. Drake, San Carlos, and including Walter Kellogg, district manager of the Pacific Gas and Electric Company, remains as follows: M. J. Bettencourt, Half Moon Bay; Eric Alsford, Pescadero; and Ira Potter, South San Francisco.

SAN MATEO TAKES IN HOMESTEAD DISTRICT

Adding an estimated population of more than 450 persons to San Mateo, with an area of approximately 100 acres, a special election for annexation of the Homestead Sanitary District to San Mateo was carried last Saturday by a vote of 77 to 51.

The vote on Saturday, coupled with the recent annexation of adjoining territory, has increased San Mateo's population by more than 800, and has added a total of approximately 400 acres to the area of the city, it is estimated. More than twenty new homes are under construction in the sanitary district at this time, it is stated.

SUPERVISORS LET THE CONTRACT FOR NEW RELIEF HOME

A new county relief home, to take the place of the one destroyed by fire some time ago, is to be constructed. At the meeting of the San Mateo county board of supervisors at Redwood City last Monday the board approved bids for the construction of a new relief home and a new unit of the Community hospital.

The general contract for the new relief home, to replace the present buildings, was awarded to Vogt & Davidson, of San Francisco, on a bid of $81,743, the lowest among several submitted.

The general contract for the hospital unit, which is to house additional tubercular patients and include a nurse's home, was awarded to L. Dioguardi, San Mateo, at $14,350. The figure is to include steam heating, at a cost of $2,625.

Three other contracts on the relief home were awarded, as follows: Electric wiring, Mark Ryan, Redwood City, $2,240; plumbing and heating, Frank J. Klimm, San Francisco, $7,308; heating, Dowd & Welch, San Francisco, $5,707.

Work on both the relief home and the new hospital unit are to be under way immediately.

Closing of a number of streets at Miramar was asked for in a petition presented on behalf of Dante Diandi and G. Petroni. The streets are no longer needed since the land is devoted to ranch purposes, the applicants alleged. The petition was opposed in a protest presented by Attorney George T. Kerr, of San Francisco, over signatures of fifty-three property owners of the district. The closing of the streets will prevent residents of the community of Granada from direct traffic with the county highway, the protest charges.

Petitions of a number of hog raising firms in the Colma district for permits under a new county ordinance were granted without protest. They are Angelo Olcese, Lombardi & Nelso, Olcese & Negri, James Cullen, Thomas Cullen & Co., Belli & Gianni, George Lagomarsino and Santucci & Fabri.

PURCHASING HOMES FOR WAR VETERANS

Approximately $600,000 worth of property has been purchased in various parts of the state of California for war veterans under the direction of the State Veterans' Welfare Board, according to a report filed by George M. Stout, secretary of the board. The purcahses include farms and homes which were bought with the funds derived from the sale of $2,500,000 of the farm and home loan act bonds a month ago.

"Many of the veterans who took advantage of the farm and home loan act were firemen, postal workers, policemen and clerks," says Secretary Stout, and adds: "I am convinced every day that California is accomplishing the greatest humanitarian work yet conceived by any state in its efforts to aid and assist its veterans, and all without saddling onto the taxpayers an additional tax burden."

PIONEER FLORICULTURIST DIES AFTER LONG ILLNESS

Patrick O'Hearn, father of John J. O'Hearn of Burlingame, and one of the best known pioneer florists of San Mateo county, died Monday in a San Francisco hospital, following an illness of several weeks. Death was due to complications following a major operation last July, from which O'Hearn, 79 years of age, had never fully recovered. The deceased was among the leading floriculturists of San Mateo county, having originated a number of carnations, now well known in the industry. In addition to conducting his business, O'Hearn was for five years superintendent of the famous Mills estate at Millbrae, being credited with having laid out many of the formal gardens which make the estate one of the show places of the peninsula.

TAXATION EXEMPTION FOR WAR VETERANS

The present act which grants war veterans exemption from taxation on property of a value less than $5,000 does not exclude a former soldier or his wife from making such claim where neither the veteran nor his wife own property, individually, up to the exemption limit, though both together do own in excess of that amount, Attorney-General Webb has ruled, according to word received by State Adjutant James K. Fisk of the American Legion. The opinion arose as a result of a query from Sonoma county, where a veteran and his wife both had separate property of $3,000.

Charging him with "straddling" on prohibition, the Birmingham Age-Herald declares that if President Coolidge "does not come out of his own volition, he will be smoked out." If you get what that means.

SIDELIGHTS

J. G. Sterchi, dairyman of Knoxville, Tenn., believes in the slogan "milk from contented cows." For the contentment of his bovine herd he has provided attractive stalls, individual drinking pails and a radio set. He also plans to introduce a few singing canaries and a phonograph to fill in when the static is bad.

Washington girls who seek matrimony now turn to the women's police force. Mrs. Mina C. Van Winkle, lieutenant in charge of policewomen, reports that eleven of the finest have quit recently to get married.

Mrs Florence Koontz of Kansas City ran afoul of what she considers the meanest judge in the country. He fined her for taking money from her own husband's pockets.

Spare tires are standard equipment, why not spare stockings? So thought a bright salesman, and now New York stores are selling three stockings to the pair. When a lady's stocking has a blow-out or a run, all she has to do is to find a secluded spot and slip on the spare, carried in her handbag.

By most persons the Congressional Directory would be considered a dry book. But some ingenious fellows in New York made their copies into decidedly wet ones by removing the inside pages and fitting up the covers to hold flasks of whisky.

The servant problem worried the old-timers, also. In 1756 it was written by an Englishman that "the present generation of servants in this country are the proudest, and the laziest, the most profligate, insolent and extravagant set of mortals enywhere to be found on the face of the globe."

One doesn't usually think of cows in connection with a christening of a ship, but five of them a Brown Swiss, a Holstein, a Jersey, a Guernsey and an Ayshire, figured in the launching of a big ferry at Manitowoc, Wis. Miss Marion Dixon broke a bottle containing their milk over the vessel's bow, saying, "I christen thee Madison," as the craft glided down the ways.

Another instance in which rank and pay are out of joint is noted in the state of New York. Governor Alfred E. Smith gets $10,000 a year, while George B. Groves, his able secretary, receives $12,000. It is proposed to increase the governor's salary to $25,000, which does not seem unreasonable for the boss of the Empire state.

When one reaches his ninety-first birthday he is certainly entitled to a real celebration. So thought Colonel Charles Goodnight, former frontiersman, who celebrated his by marrying Miss Corinne Goodnight, aged 26, at Fort Worth, Texas.

An aged Indian is reported to have recently voiced his scorn for our effeminite civilization, which has substituted rouge for war paint, and silk stockings for buckskin leggins. He ventured no opinion concerning what has been substituted for whisky.

Tests of a certain make of pens are said to include dopping them from a 24-story building and having them run over by motor trucks without damage. Those are just the kind Uncle San should supply for the lobbies of postoffices.

Mrs. Joseph Glascock, of Veedersburg, Indiana, recently received a dollar for a watermellon stolen from her father's patch sixty years ago. An accompanying note said: "I am on my way to heaven and on my way ran up against that mellon, which got so large I could not get over it." This is perhaps the first instance on record in which pride in getting away with a watermellon was not lifelong.

Commenting on the seriousness of marriage, H. L. Mencken says that it is "comparable with entering a monastery or enlisting for war." Coming from a bachelor, that remark stamps its author as a very close observer.

Jeff Ashworth, a North Carolina farmer, was rescued alive after being buried in a caved-in well for thirteen hours. But when brought out he was almost too weak to sign the vaudeville contract awaiting him at the top. He will be billed as "North Carolina's Floyd Collins."

Merchants at Columbia, Missouri, report that college boys at the state university simply won't buy the new derby hats, although assured that they are the correct thing. Opinion among the girls is divided. One declared that a derby makes a man look "just like a count or a duke," but another expressed her disgust by saying, "they belong in the funny paper."

Those Florida negroes who withdrew their postal savings, fearing Uncle San was going broke, had probably just heard of the war debt terms.

Without a doubt the bob is passing A nifty one passed our window just now.

ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE EXPENDITURES ARE LARGE

Expenditures of the Anti-Saloon League in educational and political campaigns during the first six years of national prohibition approximated thirteeen million dollars, figures made public by the state campaign funds commitee show.

The figures covering the national and thirty-seven state organizations were made public by the committee without comment, save a statement that they were compiled from reports submitted by officials of the league last spring during the inquiry into the Pennsylvania Senatorial primary.

The national organization expended $3,430,285 and had receipts of $3,428,829, leaving a deficit of nearly $2,000. Most of this money went into the smaller states to assist the state organizations, whoch had only small local incomes.

Of the states in which the league has large organizations, New York took first rank in the matter of outlay, the total cost being placed at $1,738,810. Illinois ranked second, with $1,200,599. These were the only two states in which the expenditures exceeded the million-dollar mark.

Maryland, which like New York, has no state prohibition enforcement code, showed an outgo of $223,350.

FROM SHIRT SLEEVES TO SHIRT SLEEVES

Another Vandebilt box in the Metropolitan Opera House has been sold, the newspapers announce. This draws attention afresh to the decay of the Vandebilt family as a financial power. The Vandebilt dynasty is disintegrating. Not one Vanderbilt is a force in the world of affairs today. The only Vanderbilt the public have heard anything about during recent years is the youthful Cornelius, who launched several tabloid newspapers, with disastrous financial consequences—so disastrous that he has unpaid debts of a million or two, and is now living very humbly in New York, doing most of his own cooking, and working most industriously as a writer to earn money to reduce his obligations. His father, General Cornelius Vanderbilt, showed early promise as an inventor, but his aptitude in this direction did not last, and for many years he has been more prominently identified with the National Guard than with high finance. When Reggie Vanderbilt died recently it was discovered that, instead of possessing millions, he owned extremely lutle, and his widow inherited only a paltry sum.

The once powerful Gould railway dynasty has also crumbled to nothingness. No Gould is today a dominating figure in the financial, railroad or business world. The Gould fortune, like that of the Venderbilts, has also waned rather than waxed.

"From shirt sleeves to shirt sleeves in three generations," while not literally true, is not wholly inapplicable to the Vanderbilts and Goulds. The process obviously is under way. Henry Ford recently remarked, when he confessed that he had not yet made a will, that when huge fortunes fall into the hands of those who do not know how to use them, they soon cease to exist. This indisputable fact should afford some consolation to those who rave against the accumulation of many millions by any man or family.—Forbes Magazine.

Naturally we are inclined to be down on the theories we are not up on.

Florida hasn't yet trotted out a calamity to offset California's plague of mice.

Sales Sense

EXPERIENCED salesmen know that—measured against results—the incidental expense involved in "covering small towns off the beaten paths" often takes the profit out of a week's work.

The good will and sales value of regular contacts with customers wherever located, however, is generally recognized.

Most effective sales plans now include the regular use of Long Distance with substantial savings in both time and expense.

Even brief delay in travel is frequently turned to profitable account by alert salesmen through the use of Public Telephones —conveniently located everywhere.

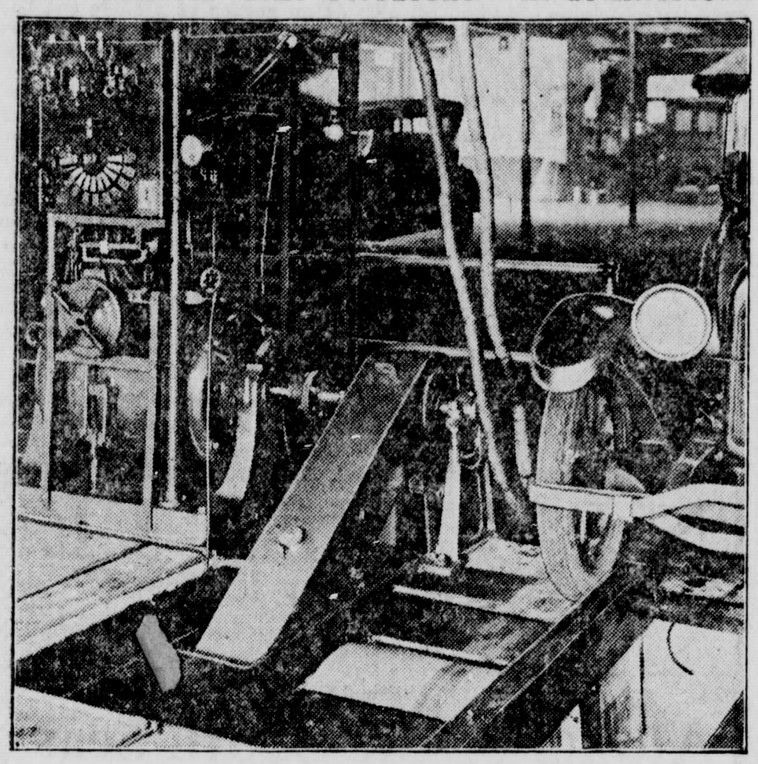
AUTOMATIC CAR PHYSICIAN IN OPERATION



None of the ills that motors are heir to can escape this new $12,000 automobile trouble shooter, established in Chicago for the benefit of the motoring public. The testing laboratory is equipped with every modern device to diagnose motor troubles and is employed exclusively for that purpose. An hour's test under the delicate instruments suffices in sounding out every part on the modern car and discovering whether or not it is functioning at its proper standard of efficiency.

DEVELOPMENT OF SPORT IS AIDED

Particularly Beneficial to Golfer in Affording Fast Transportation.

It would be interesting to delve into statistics and determine to just what extent the automobile has aided the development of any line of sport, or all lines. It is certainly true that sport flourished, but not in all its glory, before the advent of the horseless carriage. At any rate, it has certainly increased its scope since it was possible for Mr. Common People to own an automobile.

Big Aid to Golf.

"The motor car has greatly aided one of the oldest games known," says Robert S. Breyer of California, "and that is the royal and ancient pastime of golf. Great numbers of people throughout Europe, and especially in England and Scotland, swarmed the links playing golf, but the automobile has made it possible for thousands of persons in this country to indulge in the sport. An increase is also noticeable in the old country.

"The minutes of today's everyday business man are worth real money to him. And he is one of the greatest devotees of the sport in the country. The only reason for that is the automobile, quick efficient transportation between his home, the links and his office. There are very few courses in the entire country that are not accessible to the automobile, and courses to which there is no other transportation save walking.

Other Sports Benefited.

"Golf, however, is not the only sport that has been benefited by the motor car. Name any sport, and it will owe much of its recent development to the automobile. It is just a matter of a few moments to convince yourself of this. Pass the baseball parks in the morning, visit the beaches, the tennis courts, in fact any place where sport is indulged in, and note the automobiles there.

"The automobile itself, the greatest aid developed in modern business, offers a variety of sport that no one other thing could. Nothing is more beneficial than a spin into the fresh, invigorating air, and physicians everywhere recommend motoring as a great aid to a healthy physical and mental condition. Thousands annually join the ranks of those who are enjoying the benefits of the motor car in all walks of life."

Scheme Devised to End Peril of Motor Fumes

A recent experiment in the city laboratories of Paris is said to have demonstrated the practicability of a catalyzer designed to consume the carbon-monoxide gas produced by motor cars—which Prof. Yandell Henderson of Yale and others have asserted was a serious menace to public health in crowded cities.

The device consists of an exhaust pipe containing certain chemicals possessing catalyzing properties which reduce the combustion temperature of the noxious gas. By the passage of a current of air through the tubes the fumes are consumed before they can pass out into the street.

M. Kohn Abrest, director of the laboratories, says that the average motor car in Paris gives off one-half cubic meter of carbon-monoxide for each half gallon of gasoline burned and that a cubic meter of such gas renders six cubic meters of air unfit to breathe. In the country the half cubic meter of gas is scattered along half a dozen miles and consequently is harmless, he says, while in Paris the automobiles move more slowly and often fill the air of narrow streets with injurious quantities of fumes.

Pedestrians Quite Safe in Afghanistan

Not only has the United States the greatest number of motor vehicles, but it has higher ratio of automobiles to population than any other country—one car to every six persons.

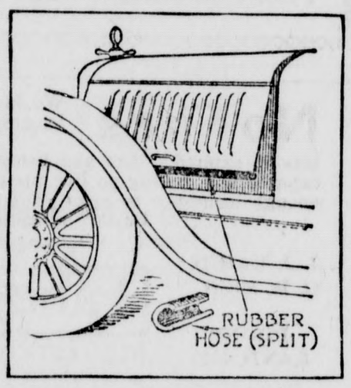
China, with a population of 436,000,000, has only one automobile for every 31,871 people, and India has only one car for every 3,573 of its population of more than 247,000,000.

Hawaii has the second highest ratio, with one car for every eleven persons, and Canada ranks third with thirteen persons for every automobile. The ratio of automobiles to population in New Zealand, which stands next in the order, is one car to fourteen persons, that of Australia, one to twenty; that of Denmark, which stands sixth, is one to fifty-one.

Ratios for other countries vary from one to fifty-three for France, to one to one million one hundred thousand in the case of Afghanistan, the lowest in rank.

Fastening Arrangements on Hood Will Get Loose

The fastening arrangements on the hood of the modern automobile usually hold it tight enough to prevent rattles, but when the fastenings wear, annoying rattles sometimes develop.



Simple Anti-Rattler for Hood.

A way to eliminate them is shown in the illustration. Take a piece of small-size garden hose the length of the hood, split it with a knife and slip it over the lower edge of the hood.—Popular Science Monthly.

AUTOMOBILE NOTES

Speedometers may lie, but you can't convince the judge that the one on the cop's motorcycle does.

No medium priced cars are shown at the Paris auto show, because in France there are only rich drivers and poor drivers.

A new British automobile travels 176.45 miles an hour. It is hard to believe that anybody in Great Britain is in that much of a hurry.

The majority of automobile accidents occur at intersections. Motorists should always assume that another driver is just coming around the corner.

It isn't strictly the railroad crossing's fault that it is more deadly than it used to be. Man got along fairly well when he had the horse to do his thinking for him.

A bill to compel motorists to stop at railroads is being opposed by motorists, and there is some force to the argument that it is about time for trains to stop as a matter of habit and look for the parts.

CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS

An army of 40,000 starving Bulgarians descended upon Modesto last week but there is no fear of over population or a food shortage as the army is composed of 40,000 Bulgarian silk worms. They were received by Professor C. E. Woodward of Modesto College from Nedu Boyadgie of Sofia, Bulgaria. They were more than a month in transit. Although there were 40,000 worms in the shipment, they came in a package that weighed but one ounce. The worms hatched out enroute to Modesto. They arrived in Modesto in a starving condition. Woodward said, and it would require a heavy diet of mulberry leaves to save them. As mulberry leaves are not obtainable now, Woodward will feed them lettuce leaves instead. The worms will be studied at college.

In anticipation of the heavy run of water down toward Tulare lake this year the Lovelace Reclamation district is having its big dredger overhauled and recaulked. There has not been sufficient water in the sloughs to float it since the flood year of 1923. Canals are being cleaned out, levees repaired and dredging machinery of the numerous reclamation districts on the lake bed being put into the best of condition, so that if a flood again comes down Kings river this spring it can be carried through the canals and be distributed on uncultivated lands, thus being kept off the immense acreage of grain on the lake bed.

A $5,500,000 power project financed by the Yosemite Power company will be under way in a very short time, it is expected as the result of the recent decision of Edward Hyatt, Jr., chief of the state division of water rights. Besides providing for the huge project the permit makes possible the diversion of 175 second feet annually from the Tuolumne river and the impounding of 65,000 acre feet on the main river and the south fork storage purposes. The proposed power plant is to be erected on the Tuolumne river a short distance above Ward's ferry.

Crime was described as America's "outstanding problem" by Lieutenant Governor Buron K. Fitts in an address delivered recently before the Commonwealth Club of San Francisco. "The crime problem," he said, "presents an actual state of armed warfare between the honest, lawabiding citizens and a malignant class, whose only means of livelihood is that of murder and robbery. The World war took 49,231 American lives; over 65,000 American citizens have been murdered in the United States since the armistice."

Cherry scions from the Hartz Mountains, in Germany, have just been received by Dr. W. L. Howard of the pomology division of the University of California's College of Agriculture at Davis. These scions will be used in the progagation of trees to be tried under California conditions. The German variety is said to be remarkably free from trunk diseases, such as gummosis, which is an enemy that takes heavy toll from California cherry trees. Sunburn, also, is said to be unknown in the German trees.

Officials and members of veterans' organizations and prominent men in civil life gathered in large numbers at the Mark Hopkins hotel in San Francisco a short time ago, in tribute to United States Attorney George J. Delegations from cities all over the state attended the banquet and joined in the testimonial to the service rendered by Hatfield.

Isaac Bradshaw of Chico, recently discovered a double-headed calf among his range cattle on the Charles Duffa ranch on Deer creek. The freak was dead, however. The left head was almost normally placed on the front of the neck, with the other head a little to one side. Both heads and the body were fully developed. There were three ears, one being unusually large at the point where the heads joined.

Agricultural students of the Napa Union high school earned more than $4,000 last year. This is according to Philip Webster, agricultural instructor. Lassen Peak is not dead—far from it—and the greatest period of earth tremors on record there, which occurred between March 10 and 12, in addition to almost daily tremblors the entire month, indicate that the famous mountain may at any time justify its reputation as "the only active volcano in continental United States." So states R. H. Finch, volcanologist of the United States geological survey in charge of the observation at Mineral on the slopes of Lassen.

California shipped 45,000 cars of fresh fruits and vegetables to New York City in 1926 as compared with 25,000 cars from Florida and 22,000 cars from New York state, according to official reports. New York is the largest market for perishables in the United States and receives supplies from almost every state in the Union, as well as a number of foreign countries. It is interesting to note that California originates almost as much "perishable" stuff as the two nearest competing states combined.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

by MARY GRAHAM BONNER

CITY ADVENTURES

Now whenever Dorothy or Douglas had gone shopping they had always walked into the shop through a door which was on the street. Sometimes they had gone upstairs in the shop—but they had always gone into it in the regular way they had thought.

But this time Uncle John was taking them shopping below the level of the street. For the shops were in the Hudson Terminal building and the street was above them!

How strange it did seem. They had a little money to spend and they decided how much to spend on candy, and how much to save for a soda.

They were picking out their candy as they saw people rushing in, giving orders for all sorts of things under the sun that could be bought and then hurrying out, saying:

"We'll be back for our bundles tonight."

"Can't they stop to get them now?" Dorothy asked.

"They haven't time, I suppose," said Douglas. "I really don't wonder they haven't time. There is so much to see in the Wonder City that sometimes I feel like rushing just that way myself."

"But then we wouldn't see the wonders," said Dorothy. Before Dorothy had finished speaking several people had shrieked, and someone had grabbed them, pulling them back. What had happened? They couldn't imagine!

And everyone seemed so frightened! Just then into the underground store came a horse with a wild bound and rush. For a rather warm mid-winter day had come and the doors had been swung wide open. The people hurried, scurried back of the counter. A runaway horse in the shops below the street level!

Fishes of All Sorts and Sizes.

How could he have managed it? At last someone caught the horse, no one was hurt and the people were quiet again.

"That doesn't seem so queer to me," said Dorothy. "He probably wanted to give an order for hay and then rush out saying he would be back again in the evening to get it before he left for New Jersey!"

"Well," laughed Douglas, "that is quite an idea of yours, but I believe hay is about the only thing they don't sell in these shops. However, I don't think it's queer that the horse wanted to see what was down here."

"Yes," agreed Dorothy, "we've learned in our reader that the horse is the most intelligent animal and I suppose he wanted to see a wonder, too!"

And, while Uncle John laughed, too, and joined in their talk, he felt his heart beating a little faster than usual, for he felt it had been a very narrow escape.

He hoped that none of the fishes would do anything wild, for the fishes were to be visited that day.

"Yes," he told Douglas and Dorothy, "at last we're to really pay a visit at the Aquarium. It has been put off quite long enough."

So they all went down to the Aquarium which was at their beloved Battery and which looked out upon New York Harbor.

It was the large building they had passed so many times on their way to boats to take harbor trips.

Inside were tanks filled with water in which were fishes of all sorts and sizes.

"Do you see," said one of the keepers to Douglas, "that the fishes are giving a circus today? They haven't put up billboards as real circus people do, but they have been splashing enough for the past few days for anyone to tell that something wonderful was soon to happen and today they are ready."

Douglas and Dorothy went to the tank where there was a large mother seal.

She was the ringleader—just like the man in the tall black hat who stands in the center ring at the circus and cracks a big whip.

Instead of cracking a whip, mother seal was splashing.

"Splash, splash, splash, up you go, my beauties." The smaller seals in the next tank were on a board. As the mother seal gave her last signal to splash, off they dove into the tank, and when they swam up again the mother seal was splashing in a way which meant:

"A splendid trick, my children. You are the wonders of the age."

Young Diplomat

Mrs. Jones, who was busily sweeping the floor, was bothered by Junior, her small son, until she exclaimed:

"Now, Junior, you sit on that chair and when I finish sweeping I'm going to spank you."

Junior climbed into the chair and sat brooding for a few minutes. Finally he said: "Oh, mother dear, I just think you're the cutest thing."

Of course that saved the day for Junior.

NEWSPAPERS PAY BEST

Considerable comment has been caused by the recent announcement that future advertising appropriations of the Westinghouse Electrical and Manufacturing Company will be expended almost entirely in newspapers.

The Westinghouse Corporation has long been the leader among advertisers in its line, and has spent more than a million dollars for newspaper space in the last two years. What it will spend this year has not been stated, but it is safe to say that it will be double that of former years.

Other manufacturers of electrical equipment and supplies also are large users of advertising space in newspapers. Last year the Graybar spent $500,000, and the General Eelectric spent $140,000, large increases over former expenditures for newspaper space.

While all advertising, if properly prepared and judiciosuly distributed, is productive of results, shrewd advertisers in all lines are coming more and more to the conclusion that, dollar for dollar, newspaper advertising pays better than any other form of publicity know to modern business.

BABE'S $70,000 A YEAR

Since Babe Ruth signed a new three-year contract with the Yankees at $70,000 a year, much discussion has been going on as to whether he, or any other baseball player, should receive such a salary.

Looking at the matter from a standpoint of ordinary common sense, that figure seems ridiculously large to pay a man whose chief ability lies in swatting a baseball over the fence. This is all the more apparent when we reflect that the Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, for example, receives only $15,000 a year.

But, on the other hand, it must be remembered that there is no other man in the world who can wield a bat like Babe Ruth, while there are possibly several hundred lawyers who could acceptably fill the office now held by former President Taft. It is also notorious that the public is willing to bestow its highest rewards upon those who entertain or amuse, as may be seen by the fabulous sums paid to champion pugilists, leading opera singers, favorite actors and actresses, and so on.

With a pugilist taking around half a million dollars for winning a single fight, at which more than a million dollars are paid for admissions, we have an illustration of what people will pay for the kind of amusement they want.

Babe Ruth has been for several years and still is the biggest drawing card in baseball. As an asset to the owners of the Yankees, he is worth his new salary. So, if he and his boss are satisfied, we suppose the rest of us ought to be.

RESULT OF SAFETY TEACHING

Here is a specific example that shows the effect of safety teaching:

A small colored boy was one of a class in Springfield, Massachusetts, that worked out an elaborate project in fire prevention. Among other things the class made a trip to a fire station and was taken to a fire alarm box and taught to ring an alarm. In their classroom work, in addition to the more usual activities they also built a fire station and an alarm box. A few months later a fire broke out in the kitchen of the small boy's home. His mother lost her head and stood in the middle of the floor crying, but Nathaniel ran out and rang in an alarm, waited for the fire engines to come, and directed them to his home. The next day the father told the principal of the school that the action of the boy was undoubtedly all that saved his home from burning, a home that represented his entire savings.

An Abyssinian woman who lies is given a public haircut. The same thing sometimes happens in this country, but here it is a mere coincidence instead of a penalty.

WOMAN SERVES AT 92

Perhaps America's most remarkable woman is Mrs. Rebecca Latimer Felton of Georgia, who has many claims to distinction, any one of which alone would be sufficient to make her an interesting personage. One which is unique is that she is the only woman ever to hold the office of United States Senator.

When a Georgia Senator died some years ago, the governor of that state appointed her to the office to serve for one day, in honor of her distinguished services to the state in many ways, she being a noted writer and speaker. She is the widow of Rev. W. H. Felton, who was formerly a member of Congress.

Just now Mrs. Felton is engaged, at the age of 92, in assembling and arranging a wealth of historical material, gathered during her long life, which she will present to the University of Georgia for preservation.

In perfoming this labor of love, it is said that she is busier than ever, putting in several hours daily, going over her letters received in correspondence with famous leaders of the Confederacy and statesmen of later years, arranging these together with a mass of rare documents and articles of historic and sentimental interest, which through her labors are to be saved for posterity.

Thus the "Grand Old Lady of Georgia" still patriotically serves her state and the nation, in spite of her 92 years.

UNCLE SAM'S PUBLICITY

From every department and bureau of the government there comes from week to week a mass of publicity matter which the newspapers of the country are expected to publish, "in the interest of their readers."

Some of this material carries real information of value, but a great deal of it is merely propaganda or advertising, for which publishers should be paid. The people who prepare, print and mail this matter are paid as government employes. Why should the newspaper man, whose space costs money to produce, give it free to the government?

This question is especially pertinent in view of the persistent competition of the government in the printing of envelopes, thereby injuring the smaller newspapers having job departments. It would be just as reasonable for a mail order house to ask a local merchant to distribute its catalogues, as for the Post Office Department to ask for free publicity.

AMERICANS ARE FORTUNATE

Americans not only get the cheapest gasoline in the world, but they get their gasoline more cheaply by comparison with the general structure of prices than any other staple of comparably wide use.

Take your American dollar to Paris or Berlin, to Constantinople or Buenos Aires, to the City of Mexico or Shanghai, or Pekin or Timbuctoo, and you will get for it only a fraction as much gasoline as you would get here in the United States at any filling station. That is true because the industry here in America is incomparably more efficient than in any other country, and because it has always passed on to the consumer the benefits of improved processes and advanced method in both production and distribution.

Justice Holmes of the Supreme Court is 86, and says he keeps young by working. But it's a terrible price to pay.

CRACK INDIAN TROOP

Ordinarily one would suppose that seventy-four full-blooded Indians, representing twenty-nine different tribes, would be a rather tough outfit to handle. That such is not the case is illustrated by Troop C, 114th Cavalry, Kansas National Guard, of Haskell Institute, famed Indian school at Lawrence, Kan., one of the crack military organizations of the United States.

The young men composing the troop have come to the school from twenty states, and the roster includes thirteen Cherokees, eleven Sioux, six Pimas, five Navajos, four Utes, and one or two each of twenty-four tribes.

This crack troop is famous for its silent drill, in which the members perform 1,192 distinct movements in marching and in excution of the manual of arms, without a command or guiding signal of any kind, the excercise taking a period of ten minutes.

This drill is one of the entertainment features presented for distinguished visitors to the school, and last year exhibitions were given in Chicago and Kansas City. The troop will probably go to New York this summer in response to an invitation from that city. Besides the military drill, the troop members displayed their traditional Indian prowess in athletic events.

Great interest in the organization is manifested by the War Department, which recently issued an official statement concerning it, from which the above facts are taken.

That these descendants of former savage tribes, once hostile alike to each other and to the whites, are able to forget past animosities and work harmoniously and pridefully in a common organization is something worth thinking about.

If so-called Christian nations could only catch something of this spirit they might some day become truly civilized.

LITERARY BURGLARS

It is related of a certain family of early settlers in an Eastern state that they would steal anything that was not too heavy or too hot to carry away. Burglars who robbed the educational building of the First Baptist church of Tuscaloosa, Ala., a few nights ago, might well be imagined as descendents of that family.

An inventory of missing property compiled from memory the morning after the thieves' visit contained the following items: One typewriter, some one hundred valuable books, including a set of "Wit and Humor;" notebooks of sermons, a minister's manual, two books of evangelistic sermons, a brief case, pencils, paperweights, some gold ornaments, $6 in money and four packages of chewing gum, the last from the desk of Miss Bernice Caldwell, the church secretary.

Apparently the robbers were of a literary turn of mind, in which case an intellectual feast is before them. Doubtless many of the stolen volumes are the very ones they ought to read.

Should the contents of the books lead them to forsake their evil ways and turn evangelists, as has happened to some, they will have valuable material for use in their new roles.

A MODERN JONAH

Folks who believe in the Biblical story of Jonah and the whale has been ridiculed by skeptics may find comfort and satisfaction in this story, told in Capper's Weekly, and submitted for what it is worth.

According to the account, one James Bartley, an English sailor, was missing after the crew of his vessel had captured a large sperm whale off Falkland Islands in February, 1891. After working a day and a night removing the whale's blubber, the stomach was hoisted aboard showing signs of life. Upon cutting it open, Bartley was discovered inside, unconscious, but was shortly revived, only to be found to be a raving maniac.

He recovered his reason in about two weeks and related his experience of having been thrown from a boat and slipping into the whale's stomach. He said the heat was terrific, but he was able to breathe, although he soon became unconscious and knew nothing more until he regained his senses on board the ship.

It is said that Bartley's skin was bleached to deathly whiteness by the heat and the gastric juices of the whale, and remained so, although he otherwise recovered.

We merely repeat the story. You can believe it or not.

COST OF GOVERNMENT

The cost of all government in the United States is enormous. It is eleven and one-half billion dollars—nearly one-sixth of the entire annual income of the country.

This cost is not only enormous, but it is growing. In 1925, government cost more than twelve times as much as in 1890. The increased cost of government in these thirty-five years outstripped the growth of population by more than seven to one. In 1925, we spent for government nearly half the value of our railroads.

In the five years ending with 1925, the cost of running the federal government was decreased by one-third. But at the same time the cost of running the state and local governments more than doubled.

The greatest single item in the cost of government is the public payroll. So many people are now suppored by the government that for every ten people employed in other than government work there is one person supported by the government.

During the past five years our state and local governments have put us deeper into debt at the rate of $3,000,000 a day. During 1925, this rate was increased to $3,800,000 a day—more than ten times as much as it was twenty-five years ago.

We are finding it hard now to pay only the interest on the immense debts our state and local governments are piling up. What are we going to do when the time comes to pay off the mortgage?—Everyman's Almanac.

It's a sign of spring when daughter begins to hint for a new fall hat.

AUCTION OVER TELEPHONE

At an auction of a house and lot, held recently in Cresco, Iowa, the successful bidder was not even among those present.

It happened that the auctioneer learned that two prospective bidders would be unable to attend the auction. Accordingly, telephone connections were arranged, and during the bidding the auctioneer stood near the telephone, and while addressing the crowd present, talked ino the transmitter. In this way the two absent bidders were kept informed of the progress of the sale and the house was finally sold to one of these absentees.

Each generation invents new sins, but the old models are seldom junked.

Paul Belli has purchased a new Country Club Buick.

Several short streets in Colma received badly needed coats of gravel last week.

Bennie Haubrich, of Mission street, is the proud possessor of a fine new saddle horse, called "Nugget."

Kenneth Russi, of San Francisco, a former resident of Colma, spent Saturday with Bennie Haubrich.

Miss G. Gannon is back teaching at Thornton school after a short absence last week, due to the death of her brother.

You are cordially invited to attend a whist party and dance sponsored by El Carmelo Parlor No. 181, N. D. G. W. This affair will be held in Masonic Hall, Daly City, on Wednesday evening, April 20, under the direction of Mrs. Rene Mathais. Home made cake and coffee will be served after the game.

Jack Rogers was hit by a Ford last Saturday and slightly injured, the accident occurring in the "bottle-neck."

The Colma Girls' Club held a meeting Tuesday evening in their new quarters at the Colma Community Center hall. They formerly met in Jefferson hall. Officers were nominated and the election will be held next Tuesday.

The grammar school trustees have appointed Mr. Eugene Gray as traffic officer at Vine and Mission streets. He will serve before and after school hours and at noon, safely conducting the children of the R. S. Thornton school across Mission street.

The early potatotes, which should be excellent on account of the generous rains, are at present suffering a set-back, due to some unknown cause. It is to be hoped that they will soon overcome this indisposition, as many of the people of the north end will depend on them for the first income of the season.

The Colma Girls' Club held their regular monthly supper and business meeting Thursday evening at the home of Mrs. M. P. Henderson. Miss A. Garibaldi, who was in charge of the supper, is to be congratulated for the fine meal served by her committee. Miss G. Cling, a former member, presented an excellent musical program. Seventeen girls were present.

The advisory board of the Colma Branck, Bank of Italy, held its regular monthly meeting Tuesday evening. All things are going prosperously, although the heavy investment in stocks in the parent institution is making itself felt in the amount of deposits. The rapid rise of the Bank of Italy stocks encourages the people to invest their savings in these opportunities, which have proved to be golden ones for the last two or three years, rather than depositing their savings. Possibly the future in stocks of this solid bank will be as golden.

Mr. Nicola Perata, aged 48, of Colma, passed away Saturday at St. Luke's hospital. Funeral services were held Tuesday at 2:30 p. m. Interment was in Mt. Olivet cemetery. FISH HOOK BILL VETOED

Another choice sample of what legislative labors may bring forth is seen in a law recently passed by the New York Assembly, providing that in Lake Keuka a fishing line may not have to exceed seven leaders and on each leader not to exceed three triple hooks.

The solons were doubtless chagrined to see Governor Smith veto this seemingly vital piece of legislation. Those who had labored long and ardently for the bill must have felt their souls sink within them when the governor set all their efforts at naught.

To make matters worse, he razzed them in his veto, saying:

"The time and money of the state are both used up in the passage of an amendment to the law that will enable our citizens to put an extra hook on a fishing line in Lake Keuka. To my mind the thing seems so silly that I am unable to accept the bill. There is nothing before me that indicates in the slightest degree that the fish will bite any better when the extra hook is added to the line by law."

A good many newspapers are publishing extracts from the Bible, which must be live news to many of their readers.

LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE USED TO SUPPRESS CRIME

A long distance telephone service, operative twenty-four hours of the day, has been established at the State Motor Vehicle Department at Atlanta, Georgia, as an aid to the suppression of automible crimes in that state. An operator will be on duty at all hours of the day and night to answer calls and give immediate information relative to the ownership of any automobile in the state.

Thus, an owner of an automobile, or a public official, or any person concerned, can secure immediate information from the Motor Vehicle Department as to the ownership of any given car. It is felt that in this way aid will be given in the suppression of crime.

The initial dance of the drill team of El Carmelo Parlor No. 181, Native Daughters of the Golden West, and the drum corps of Niantic Parlor No. 105, Native Sons of the Golden West, will be held in Native Sons' Auditorium at 430 Mason street, San Francisco, on Saturday evening, April 30. The drill team of El Carmelo Parlor consists of twenty peppy young girls commanded by Major Laura Figone, and is famous throughout the state for the excellent manner in which the drills are executed. By attending this affair you will have the privilege of enjoying exhibition drills by the Native Sons and Native Daughters, and also an evening of dancing to Pete Butti's excellent dance music.

PETALUMA CLEANS EGGS WITH AID OF ELECTRICITY

Because the American breakfast table wants its eggs spotlessly clean, Petaluma has spent a good deal of time and money on the task of washing eggs. Hand cleaning was a slow and expensive process, as even an expert could not handle more than seven cases a day. How a better, faster and cheaper way was finally found is told in the following dispatch to the San Francisco Bulletin:

"After much experimenting, electrical engineers finally applied an electrically operated centrifugal compressor which would direct a blast of sand upon a continuous procession of eggs, moving in stately procession on an automatic conveyor. This blast of sand removes all extraneous substances immediately, and imparts a fine, even finish to the most untidy egg."

In 1883 Seattle had just ninety telephones. Today the city has over 100,000.

STORY FROM THE START

While despondent over the enforced hiding of her fiance, Jim Dallas, slayer in self-defense of Homer Parkinson, member of an influential family, Sybil Saunders, popular actress, is engaged to play Viola in a charity performance of "Twelfth Night" on Gull Island, on the Maine coast. After the play Hugh Bassett, Anne Tracy's fiance, Tells Joe he has heard he is spying on Sybil to learn the whereabouts of Jim Dallas and earn the reward offered by the Parkinson family. The boy denies it. Joe is arranging for a vacation trip. To Anne he betrays his enmity toward Sybil. Stokes tells Sybil he has news of Dallas, and to secure privacy they arrange to meet in a small summer house. The sound of a pistol shot startles the assembled company. Investigation shows a revolver has been taken from a desk in the library.

"That's just what we want to know. Where were you?"

"Sitting out on the balcony."

"See anybody?"

"No. I've been looking about. I went down the path to the pine grove and round the house but I didn't see a soul."

"Why, who could it be?" said Anne. "Aren't we all"—she looked over the standing figures—"No, we're not all here. Who's outside?"

"Mrs. Stokes is." Shine spoke up. "I saw her walking along the ocean bluffs as I came up from the point."

"Sybil is, too," Mrs. Cornell added. "She went out just a few minutes ago. I saw her from my window."

"It can't be either of them." Bassett's vexation had given place to a sudden uneasiness. "I don't understand. Nobody could have come over from the mainland with the tide up. I'll go out there—"

A sound from outside stopped him. It was a cry in a woman's voice, close by.

"What's that?" someone said, and before an answer could come, the cry rose again—a high wailing scream carrying words:

"Sybil! Sybil! Sybil's dead—Sybil's killed!"

A clamorous mingling of voices rose from the group, combined in a single up-swelling note of horror. The men rushed for the entrance and met Flora Stokes. She burst in between them, white as the ghost of Caesar, with her opened mouth a dark cavity.

"Sybil's murdered — dead — shot." Each word was projected in a screaming gasp.

Bassett shouted at her, "Where?"

And she waved an arm toward the channel.

"There—from the Point. She's gone—she's dead! She went over into the water. On the top of the cliff. She's murdered—dead—murdered!"

As if she were dead, too, and of no more consequence, they fled past her—a line of people streaming out into the serene evening that held a hideous catastrophe. Only Anne stayed, her face as if overlaid by a coating of white paint. She went to Flora and seized her by the arm.

"What was it?" she whispered. "Who did it?"

The woman looked at her at first as if not knowing who she was. Then jerking her arm free, clasped her hands against the sides of her head and went across the room staring upward and crying out:

"I don't know. I didn't see—. It's God's truth, I don't know."

Anne ran after the others.

CHAPTER V

The moon had risen and hung on the edge of the sky like a great disk of white paper. Anne saw the others running this way and that along the edge of the point. A boat was pushing out from the dock, Stokes in it, and, caught by the current, it shot down the gleaming surface of the channel. There were cries in men's voices and Stokes' answer, bell-clear from the water. Then Shine ran by her, back to the house, grim-visaged with staring eyes.

She ran on through the pine wood up the path beyond. Mrs. Cornell met her, tried to speak with chattering teeth, but ended in a scream and fell upon her shoulder. Over her head Anne saw Bassett flying down the slope to the wharf. Then presently boats moving out from Hayworth. They sped back and forth, up and down, swift black shapes that seemed to be executing some complicated maneuvers along the glittering track of moonlight. She was aware of Bassett's figure leaving the wharf and racing to the house, of Shine thudding by and calling:

"They're here already! I got someone on the wire and I told him to go like hell."

Miss Pinkney's voice answered him from the edge of the Point where she stood like a black basalt statue:

"Oh, they're here, all right. Every feller that has a boat's out. But it's no use; no one who's ever got caught in that current's been found."

Shine muttered an invocation and came to a stop. They all stood speechless staring at the boats—the boats looking for Sybil who half an hour ago was alive like themselves and now was—where?

As soon as we saw the fleet in operation, Bassett ran to the house. He had to find Flora and get fuller information from her before he called up the police, and not seeing her outside, he supposed she was still there. The great room was almost dark. He felt for one of the standard lamps and pulled the string. The gush of light fell directly over her, close to him, sunk in an armchair, as still as if she, too, had ceased to live. He had expected difficulties in getting a coherent statement from her, but she told him what she had seen, briefly and clearly, as if she had known he was coming and was ready for him.

She had skirted the island and come to that part of the path which faced the Point. A hollow intervened, extending to the water's edge in a mass of shelving rock. Across this hollow she saw Sybil appear on the end of the Point, coming up from the opposite side, and almost immediately heard the shot. Sybil had thrown up her arms, staggered forward and gone over the bluff. It all happened in a flash and Flora, though describing herself as dazed, had run down the path into the hollow and out on the rocks thinking she could catch her. But she saw the body go swirling by—far out of her reach, caught and borne along in the current. She had watched it, stunned, then had come to her senses and staggered back to the shore—and ran to the house. On the way there she had seen no one and heard nothing.

Bassett left her and went to the library to call up Forestville, the county seat. It was the starting point for hunting parties to New Brunswick, and Bassett, a sportsman in his leisure hours, had stayed there several times assembling his guides and gear. On his last trip, two years ago, trouble with a guide had brought him in contact with the sheriff, Abel Williams. Over legal wrangling they had struck up a friendship and he remembered Williams as a man of some capacity, straight and fair-minded. If he was still in office it would simplify matters; to start out with confidence in the director would be a vital gain. He waited, the receiver against his ear, a foot drumming on the carpet, then a deep and growling voice hummed along the wire. It was Abel Williams.

Williams would be down as soon as he could, with Mr. Rawson, the district attorney—an hour and a half to two hours, the roads being bad. The shore people had been told it was an accident—that's all right, couldn't hold an inquest anyway without a body and it was a good thing to keep 'em off. Better not let anything come out till they'd got the situation in hand, easy to fix at that end as the United American Press man was off fishing. They'd do a good deal better if the press was held off for a spell. Seeing where the island was and that there was no one on it but their own crowd, it would be possible to keep things out of the public eye till they had the work well started.

Bassett looked at his watch—nearly eight—probably two hours to wait. The best thing he could do was to get them together and keep them as quiet as he could. As he went down the path his mind collected and marshaled in order the facts he would have to present. They had all been in the house except Stokes on the balcony and Flora walking round the island. Stokes eaten into by a hopeless love, Flora on fire with jealousy and hate—passions that make for murder. "God, what's going to be the end of this?" he groaned to himself.

He found them in a group near the pine grove, excitedly conferring together. Stokes had just returned with the electric torch and they were preparing to search the ground for footprints. Bassett brought their activities to an end and shepherded them to the house. With dragging feet and lowered heads they trailed up the path and filed into the living room.

Here, under the radiance of the lights, they looked at one another as if expecting to see startling changes and fell groaning into chairs, or sat, stiff and upright, with rigid muscles. Bassett had told them when the authorities might be expected and as the hour drew near, dread of the drama in which they found themselves stilled their tongues. The sea breeze, freighted with the acrid odors of uncovered mud and seaweed, blew through the room. Bassett rose and closed the garden door, and eyes shifted to him, hung on his hand as it slid the bolt.

He crossed to where Anne was sitting by the entrance. She had her back to the room and was looking out at the lights of Hayworth dotting the shore. He stood behind her chair and put his hand on her shoulder. Her fingers stole up and rested on his, icy cold. He bent till his head was close to hers and whispered:

"Bear up. Thank God this can't touch you in any way."

Her fingers pressed an answer but she said nothing.

Shine came toward them: "Those fellers were lucky who got off this afternoon. I might have gone with them if I'd had the sense."

Anne answered this time:

"Yes, they were more fortunate than we are."

Mrs. Cornell, between sobs, spoke up:

"But even if we were here they can't suspect us. We've got alibis, we're all accounted for. We were all in—"

She realized where she was going and stopped. There was a portentous silence. Shine almost shouted, pointing out at the channel:

"The tide's falling fast. They can't get into the dock here. How will they make a landing?"

Bassett answered:

"In a cove at the upper end of the island. They've a dock there for low water. They have to make a detour that's all."

Flora, who had been sitting with her hand over her eyes, dropped it and sat erect. Her breath came from her in a loud exhalation that was almost a groan. Every pair of eyes shifted to her, watchful, questioning, apprehensive.

"Do you feel ill, Flora?" said Bassett, moving to her side.

"No—no," she looked wildly about. "But this waiting—it's so awful."

Miss Pinkney suggested a glass of water, but Flora waved a hand as if pushing it away. Stokes rose and moved to a seat beside her.

"They'll be here soon now."

She sank back and closed her eyes. Her husband bent a somber, sidewise look toward her, then laid his hand on one of hers. Her own turned and the thin fingers twined like clinging roots about his.

"It won't be hard," he reassured. "Just give them a clear account of what you saw."

She waved the other hand in front of her face, like a person in unendurable pain, who makes a vague distracted gesture for silence.

Anne spoke from the door:

"There's a light moving out from the shore."

The statement shook them. There was a simultaneous stir of feet and bodies, a heave of labored breaths.

Bassett went to the entrance:

"Yes—that's a launch. They're coming. I must go to meet them."

He looked over the company, the haggard faces all turned toward him. Some of them wore an expression of yearning appeal as if he was their only source of strength in this devastating hour:

"Now, remember there's nothing to get scared or rattled about. They'll ask you questions and what you must do is to answer them accurately—not what you think or imagine but what you know. Keep that in the front of your minds. The clearer you are in your statements the quicker you'll get through. And please stay here, just as you are. They'll probably want to see you right off."

A benumbed silence followed his departure. Anne moved from the door to a chair nearer the others. Stokes withdrew his hand from Flora's and straightened himself, jerking down his waistcoat and craning his neck up from his collar. The low rippling murmurs of the receding tide were singularly distinct. Suddenly the shrill whistle of a launch pierced the night outside. Mrs. Cornell leaped as if the sound had been a weapon that had stabbed her:

"Oh!" she cried, "why do they do that? Isn't Sybil being murdered enough to stand!"

"For God's sake, keep your mouth shut," Stokes flung at her, glaring.

The savage quality in his voice penetrated Mrs. Cornell's encasing terrors. She shrunk and slid the look of a frightened animal at Shine. Then the silence settled and they sat like those who have looked upon the head of Medusa.

Tender Notes Burned by Mrs. Washington

After George Washington's death his widow burned every letter that she had received from him, with the exception of three or four that escaped apparently by accident.

No one has ever elucidated the motive behind this letter burning episode. Martha Washington knew at the time, indeed, the whole world knew, that George Washington was a star of the first magnitude in the field of history and that every scrap of his writing would be treasured and printed. Did she feel that his letters to her were so sacred in their intimacy that posterity had no right to read them?

But there are other tenable hypotheses. She was antidemocratic and antipublic to an extreme degree. Considering her as surrounded by such limitations of perspective, one may readily conceive that her motive may have been simply one of aristocratic seclusion.

In destroying his letters she effectually effaced herself, for she lived only in his reflected light. But that may have been what she wanted. The highest form of pride is a disdainful humility.—The Nation.

"Herbert's Antique" a Paradise

By RUBY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

"WHATEVER is the man trying to do with the house?" was the question a neighbor asked.

"Ruin it—looks to me," replied her companion across the fence.

They were both watching the, to them, ridiculous proceedings of the young man who, apparently, had bought the little house on the corner. The new owner was making what his feminine neighbors considered a total wreck of the place. He had scraped and whittled down the perfectly good shingles until they looked like nothing so much as some handmade things used because there was nothing else. He had lopped off a nice even corner to make it look as if it had sagged on its foundation. And now he seemed to be smearing the whole with a sort of dirty paint that looked like a cross between moss color and mole. He had removed the door to replace it with one that was made in two parts, had taken out the up-to-date electric bell to place a brass knocker to serve the purpose. He had set in seven window lights above the door that would only need a lot of washing and extra work. Altogether, in the eyes of his neighbors, this new owner had destroyed the beauty of the little house on the corner.

In his own estimation, Bob Herbert was creating a work of art. And, in the opinion of the friends who spent week-ends with him in his unfinished abode he was accomplishing something genuinely artistic. "Herbert's Antique," they called the wee house with its fast aging look.

"Out comes that grand cement walk next week," announced Bob as he stood in the doorway framed in pink hollyhock. "Some one might have saved himself a lot of time and money if he had looked ahead—for out it comes. I'm going to have a flagstone walk all overgrown with grass and portulaca to match these lovely hollyhocks. How they ever came to be here I'll never know. They seem to have been born here—for they are so much a part of my scheme."

Bob's vacation was beginning and he arose bright and early on Monday morning to get done with the distasteful task of taking up the cement slabs to clear the way for his flagstones.

It was well into the week when he found his walk nearly finished so far as the laying of the stones was concerned. He surveyed it, whistling, and lighting his pipe in the failing daylight. It was only darkness that forced him to abandon his work.

Tired, he sat down on the pile of unused stones and puffed away at his pipe, his legs crossed, his mind's eye visualizing the walk when it would be overgrown with grass and look as if it had always been there.

A high, thick privet hedge separated his garden from the grounds next door. He heard voices on the other side. They came nearer. Two women discussed flowers and were examining, apparently, some lily-of-the-valley plants that grew near the hedge. Bob smoked on, but his heart took an unfamiliar quickening. One of the voices was vaguely recognizable to him. And yet—it couldn't be hers. She was in Europe taking a summer course in art. She had said good-by to him almost coldly because he had suggested that he cared for her.

"I have nothing of the sort in mind," she had said. "My art is my life. I shall not let any man interfere with it."

"Oh—there is nothing I would love more," replied the voice that Bob was certain now, was Beth's own. "But I must get to work. The big strike in England that sent me back home post haste was not for nothing. My plans have not been upset by anything but Fate. It must be that I am to remain at home and work. It is lovely out here, Helen, and it is good of you to want me."

Beth asked about who owned the house and all the conventional questions, but the answers were so guarded that he did not hear them.

Then the voices drifted away, the lights were switched on in the house next door and Bob was alone with his newly aroused longings for the only girl he had ever loved.

He watched the house from his own darkened room and when he caught sight of the dear face of Beth as she reached up to lower the shade in her sleeping room, he decided that he must find some way to win her.

There was a song she had always asked him to sing—for he sang a bit. "Just You" was the title. Would she understand if he should play his ukulele under her window as lovers did in story books, and sing to her?

He found the opening in the hedge and, with a scratch or two from rose thorns, he found his way to a spot beneath her room. He sang their song once and then listened. Softly, the window opened. She had heard. The moon was up. He stood in its rays.

"Bob," she whispered.

"Beth," he answered.

And then followed a whispered explanation and a promise of meeting in the morning.

"Herbert's Antique," became thereafter, to two young people, "Herbert's Paradise," and before another summer had rolled around Beth was helping to plant the seeds in the old-fashioned garden. Often as she worked, she hummed the minor melodies in "Just You."

Expert Predicts Reception of Programs of Vision and Sound.

"Radio broadcasting today is recognized for what it is: A great humanizing and cultural force, educationally comparable only to the press of our country," said Merlin H. Aylesworth, president of the National Broadcasting company, in an address to the Engineers Society of Western Pennsylvania.

"Reflect on the fact that already radio broadcasting commands an audience of 20,000,000 persons in the United States and that by the end of 1927 this audience probably will be increased to 27,000,000 or 28,000,000 listeners.

"A new science of electro acoustics has been created for broadcasting. Our engineers have progressed greatly in learning how to handle sound in the air.

Mikes Are Better.

"Microphone technique has been improved to the extent that not only the middle register, but the high notes and low notes of music or the speaking voice, can now be handled by the microphone.

"Modulation systems have been worked out by which distortion in radio transmission practically has been eliminated.

"Sound control systems have been developed by which an invisible radio-conductor mixes and controls the output of the microphone, so that a concert might be transmitted in perfect form by the broadcasting station."

Radio broadcasting, Mr. Aylesworth pointed out, has still many problems to solve. He continues:

"With the great advances made in the technique of radio transmission, with nearly every American boy a radio 'expert,' it may seem strange, perhaps, that there are any fundamental problems left for the electrical engineer to solve in radio broadcasting. Yet it is made plain to me by our own engineers that a vast, unknown continent of space, between the radio broadcasting station and the radio receiving set, still remains to be explored before we can say we have fully plumbed the possibilities of radio communication.

"Unless broadcasting transmission is to slow up the progress of broadcast reception, the broadcasting station must ever look forward to the goal of perfection. It is apparent that no receiving set developed can give better results than the best available broadcast transmission.

Some of Mysteries.

"We have theories about everything, but we have yet to discover, it seems, why electro-magnetic waves can cover greater distances over salt water than over land; why with the same power from the transmitting station we can reach greater areas over flat land than over hilly country, over moist land than dry land.

"Our engineers are still balked by the exasperating phenomena of short-wave transmission, when reception is often good 1,000 miles away from the broadcasting station and almost impossible at the distance of 100 miles from the transmitter.

"Great progress has been made in controlling static disturbances, but the engineering mind will not rest content until it has tracked the beast to its lair and put a final stop to its depredations. The mystery of 'fading,' or the sudden variation of signal strength sometimes noted in radio reception, has not yet been pierced.

"Great tasks of discovery still challenge the radio scientist, and the National Broadcasting company in addition to its administrative and operating activities, must pursue an unremitting course of scientific investigation."

Photographic Progress.

The phenomenal progress made in radio photography in recent years, Mr. Aylesworth said, had brought radio television at least within thinking distance. Laboratory developments, he indicated, would soon demonstrate that photographic images could be transmitted by radio in seconds, rather than in minutes as heretofore.

"Even in the discussion of a subject as ethereal as radio," he declared, "it may not be permissible to take one's feet off the ground. Yet the concurrence of events is such that it is difficult to keep the mind from projecting itself to the day when radio will not only be the great carrier of sound, but the carrier of sight.

"When facsimile documents and pictures are transmitted across the ocean by radio in 20 minutes—and this is its present commercial record—there is at least room for speculation as to radio television.

"When one year later, a half-tone photograph is transmitted in two minutes by radio, and this is a feat recently accomplished under laboratory conditions by Doctor Alexanderson of the advisory engineering staff of the National Broadcasting company, the progress is indeed remarkable.

"But when we are told, as I have been, that improved apparatus now being developed in a great electrical laboratory is expected to transmit a photograph by radio in seconds, rather than in minutes, we are approaching, to some appreciable extent, the day when an image may be flashed in a fraction of a second.

"But here you will have to paint your own picture, dream your own dreams, choose your own seat by the fireside screen and receive the programs of sight and sound which some day the National Broadcasting company, in co-operation with its associates in the electrical field, may develop."

How Lower Temperature Improves Radio Signals

A study of the variation in strength of signals from the trans-Atlantic radio stations at Tuckerton and New Brunswick, N. J., conducted by Dr. L. W. Austin and Miss I. J. Wymore of the bureau of standards, Department of Commerce, and extending over more than two years, appears to prove that there is some kind of inverse relationship between signal strength and local temperature, though of course this temperature effect is often masked by other influences. That is, when temperature is low, signals are strong while when the temperature is high, signals are weak.

A curve plotted to show monthly averages of temperature and signal strengths brings out this conclusion very strikingly. The average signals of February are more than twice as strong as those of July. The day-by-day relationship is less marked, varying from fairly clear in the winter months to obscure in midsummer.

The commonly accepted ideas regarding the earth's atmosphere indicate that there should be no connection between the weather near the ground and conditions at heights of 62 miles or more, where the main variations in radio signal intensity are supposed to be produced. However, the bureau's investigations show that the variations in signal strength are actually produced in the upper atmosphere and not in the portion of the wave traveling along the ground, because in the region involved there is no definite change in intensity as a result of long continued rains or droughts or because of the presence or absence of snow, at least for wave lengths over 1,000 meters. In addition, it is hardly conceivable that the rapid intensity changes observed during cold waves can be due to the penetration of frost into the ground, because this is of necessity a gradual process.

In this investigation the bureau found it advisable to confine its studies to transmissions from stations at moderate distances, 120 to 370 miles. In the case of more distant stations, weather conditions cannot be expected to be uniform over the entire signal path, while for distances less than 120 miles the variations in signal strength for the usual trans-Atlantic wave lengths may become too small for profitable study.

Experiments are still under way.

Cone and Horn Speakers Connected in Series

There are few loud speakers which used alone can satisfy the critical ear with regard to bass note instrumental rendition and crisp speech. Hence the accepted practice in such cases is to employ two loud speakers, one selected for its partiality to bass notes and the other for its favoritism shown the higher notes so essential for crisp and understandable speech. A good combination is a cone speaker and a horn speaker connected in series. Each loud speaker should be shunted by a high resistance, so as to regulate the respective volume of each loud speaker in the combination for the proper acoustic blend.

OF INTEREST TO FANS

A good receiving set cannot be built in a hurry.

All horizontal aerials have a directional tendency.

Never use a No. 14 copper wire, or its equivalent in the "A" battery circuit.

The main requirements of a storage battery are: Charging it regularly, keeping it clean and adding pure distilled water to it every ten days or so.

A detector has nothing to do with the selectivity of the set. Tuning depends upon the design of the coils, condensers, the circuit and the system.

A battery is well charged when the hydrometer shows a specific gravity of the solution between 1250 and 1300. It is practically dead when the hydrometer shows a reading of 1150 or lower.

Wigwagging, the use of semaphore hand flags as a means of visual signaling in the United States army, has been replaced by radio.

To space turns evenly on coil tubes, guide the wires with a comb, being careful not to strip the insulation.

There have only been six methods of obtaining various forms of radio frequency energy. The first was the straight spark gap, followed by the rotary spark gap, the synchronous rotary gap, the quenched gap and arc, and finally the tube.

Sports Fashions for Spring Wear

Frocks and Suits That Are Desirable for Informal Occasions.

Days gently lengthening and big windows radiant with fresh blossoms are insistent reminders that spring is here, and that we must be about the business of assembling suitable raiment. It is a pleasant task this year, says a fashion writer in the New York Times, for the models of every description present new standards of beauty in an entirely new order of things in dress.

The most misleading title which now attaches to clothes for women is sports dress, the first of the styles to appear. Originally this type of dress was a genuine response to the need of a proper and practical outfit for athletics — serviceable, comfortable and, as earlier models are remembered, often far from beautiful. The materials were sturdy, durable homespun, flannels, tweeds and the like, corresponding to the easy footwear necessary for the fashionable sports—tennis, golf and all the rest. Women who rowed and swam, played vigorous games, climbed mountains and hiked across country dressed for each sport according to its requirements, giving thought to their appearance largely in relation to the game. That first sports costume in whatever form was a husky affair, something more mannish than anything else, and was wholly outside the province of the fashionable couturier. In the light of today's fashions that primitive sports suit, the sort of dress a woman wore for those occasions, never by any chance could have appeared at any other time.

Costume Is Different.

All that has changed with the years, during which sports dress has come through a number of stages of development, establishing by marked degrees a distinct type of costume that differs wholly from everything that was once thought to belong to an outfit for one in the social world. This began to come about when Paris, which so long persisted in ignoring the tailleur and everything that we now mean by sports dress, entered the progressive scheme of things and began to create the clothes that the younger set demanded. Each different phase, presented somewhat tentatively, has been interesting and the designs more chic and more artistic each season, so that these costumes have come to be worn not only for sports but for almost every other possible occasion except of the strictest formality. Even handsome afternoon gowns and some for evening wear—the sort of dress that is seen at smart restaurants, at the play and innumerable relatively informal affairs—are built upon lines that are basically sports models.

This story of sports dress is engaging and important because of its influence on all styles for women and because it has absorbed the interest of artists and their clientele far more than any other feature in the fashionable wardrobe. Now, at the spring season for both town and country, sports dress is a dominating topic of interest and in the latest models presents many novelties.

First of all there is the recognition given the women's sports dress to illustrate the new and more feminine styles. The very best in design, workmanship and material, and finer expression in every detail are now put into a costume which is named sports, but which is intended to be worn whenever one may fancy. The term sports is amusingly contradicted by the explanation to the purchaser that the chic, dainty frock, suit or costume offered is "not intended to be worn for real sports."

A pretty peach color crepe frock with plaited skirt and tunic blouse, relieved from stiffness by a narrow scarf attached to the back of the neck, is called a sports dress, but is worn to tea at a smart restaurant. A conventional figured crepe de chine having a tiered skirt and deep cape collar is stitched about the line of the hips to give a belted effect, and is also designated a sports dress, but could be worn with perfect propriety for luncheon, bridge or any other informal daytime affair.

In Color Compositions.

In the latest color compositions are some uncommonly attractive costumes. The new red is named "beaupolie," a darker shade, "avarale." Jade green, banshee green and all the olive shades are especially good. Ombre tints are shown from the lightest flesh to Cuba red, and there are flame, coral, lacquer, cuive and Spanish pink. A suit of soft beige rabbit's wool is knitted with a small jacquard figure in terra cotta. Another in beige is combined with a dark, rich shade of olive. Frostinet, which is very like crepella, is combined with crepe de chine in a suit of two shades of green, the blouse knitted in a small conventional pattern, and a scarf of crepe de chine is added to one side of the neck in lieu of a collar. In the knitted suits in plain colors a motif of some sort is embroidered on the front of the blouse or jumper—a little pennant, a monogram, insignia of some description, even a tiny animal or flower. On an especially pretty suit in sirup, one of the latest shades of brown, a seal of official design is embroidered.

A particular style of hat is being shown to complete the sports ensemble. It is, of course, small, and to be correct must match the color of the suit. A fine silk and straw and a wool and straw fiber is used in making these little hats, being crocheted in a delicate, uniform stitch, light as a feather and replacing most gratefully the felt cloche and vagabond shapes. With the demand for belts in the sports suits countless new styles are shown in suede.

New Sports Ensembles.

The ensembles—or, to be more strictly modish in terms, the costume compose—in sports clothes will be received with enthusiasm. The change from winter to spring dress has always been something of an ordeal, and for several years past women have made many sacrifices of comfort in wearing a fur piece with a coat dress, shivering perhaps in meeting the demands of fashion. This season the happiest possible solution is offered in the three-piece sports suit. In this the frock itself is the usual one-piece dress, or a two-piece, with the addition of a coat. The new coat is itself significant as a revival of styles that were the last word of smartness in their day. This up-to-the-minute model is a short, straight box coat, longer than the Eton.

Models in this coat differ mainly in the manner of closing. One is fastened at the neck with cravat ends that attach to a narrow band collar. An ultra-smart coat in an ensemble of lightweight wool is made on the lines of a man's cutaway, but lapped and fastened with a single button at the waistline. The coat is black, the skirt black and white checks, a combination that is always effective. In a little suit of French design the jacket of brown velvet, barely hip-length, is double-breasted and is worn with a skirt of Rodier fabric in beige kasha finely plaited. Some of the latest ensemble models are made in one color, but of different materials. One of lobster red has a frock of crepe, the skirt box-plaited with bodice attached, and a short voluminous coat of kasha lined with the crepe all in the same shade. This scheme is successfully repeated in navy, green, brown or black.

Whether the waistline be placed higher or lower, at the normal point or at the hips, is a matter of individual preference. It must however, be defined with a belt of some sort—one of the material itself, narrow, wide, shaped or straight. Scarcely a model is shown from Paris or from American designers without a belt sash or girdle.

Writer Claims Vanity Is Spoiling Language

Vanity is corrupting the French language, says Abel Bonnard, a writer of note.

It is vanity, he says, that leads people to prefer a new word, coined or from another language, to the old one they really know and understand.

"The public likes to be fooled," he remarks, agreeing with Mr. Barnum.

He cites many words used currently to describe things long used and with names of their own, but which, for commercial purposes, like the hard-working rabbit skin in the fur business, have to be baptized anew to create that "desire to buy" in the customer.

This vanity to have the latest thing, even when only the name is new, Bonnard regards as one of the chief differences between the passing generation of conservative people and the "modernists." Many people who are "up to date," he observes, shy at expressing themselves clearly and need obscure words and phrases to portray the haziness of their own minds.

First Playhouse Located

According to a writer in the Pathfinder Magazine the first playhouse or theater in the United States was located in Williamsburg, Va. It was built in 1716 during the regime of the colonial governor, Alexander Spotswood. Charles Stagg and his wife, Mary, essentially dancers, contracted with William Leingston for the theater. Some years before, in 1665, the court in Virginia acted as play censor also, having passed judgment on a performance of "Ye Bare and Ye Cub" to satisfy a complaint that the costumes were objectionable. The court found nothing objectionable, however.

Japan Develops Film Art

American motion pictures have always been popular in the Orient, and those about Indians, and the "Wild West" have been especially popular. Chaplin films also found a ready favor, but Japan is rapidly developing a film art of its own. The most popular film in Japan today is one called "Schoolmaster Matsumoto." It is an extremely simple story of the grammar grades, the climax being the rescue by the schoolmaster of one of his pupils who has fallen into the river. The film, though so simple in theme as to arouse wonder among American movie experts, ran for a full year continuously in Tokyo.

A bank operated for the people
The Bank of Italy caters to the great rank and file of citizens who are making California an empire of industry, economy and thrift.
